Dear authors and readers of our journal,

This is the last issue of the first year of publication of our new Journal of Systems Integration. The first volume of the Journal of Systems Integration contains 17 papers covering a broad range of topics. I hope that you found the information contained in these papers interesting and helpful in your research and professional practice.

Our journal is indexed in by all leading search engines, including Google, Yahoo, Bing, etc. and registered in specialized databases including Directory of Open Access, Journals Elektronische Zeitschrift Biblioteka, Intelligence Library, Georgetown University Library and Google Scholar. We are also in the process of registration with the SCOPUS database.

The Journal of Systems Integration meets all the necessary requirements for application for listing in the Thomson Reuter's Web of Science database. Our success in obtaining non-zero impact factor will depend on the quality of our publications and the level of citations of our journal. We rely on your continuing support in submitting quality papers to our journal and assisting us with maintaining high publication standard, with corresponding increase in the number of citations. We are looking forward to your continuing support in 2011. On behalf of the editorial board of the Journal of Systems Integration I wish you success in your professional endeavors.
